Briton Gets Visit

MOSCOW — Soviet authorities have given the British consul, Agnes Wood, permission to see Gerald Brooke, the London Russian teacher held incommunicado in a Moscow jail since April 26. She will see Brooke today. British Embassy officials are still pressing for the precise charge against Brooke, who was detained because of "subversive activities."

Permission for the visit was interpreted as a sign that Brooke's case would go to court, Reuters reported. If the Russians expect a prisoner to be released or expelled from the country, they normally do not allow a consular visit.
